

Editorial Note

Marcos Lisboa

This issue of HUMAN NATURE brings three articles in section dossier. Daniel O. Perez went through on Human Nature in Kant. Daniel Pansarelli, approaches the concept of human life in the labor of E. Dussel; and Suze Piza examines the convergence of human nature in Arendt and Winnicott. In the section Articles, Luiz Eduardo Prado proposes a new method of reading Freud's work. Forward, Ricardo Navia review the epistemological status of psychoanalysis and psychoanalytic research; Proceed, two new articles on Heidegger's philosophy. Edgar Lyra points to the urge to insert the Heideggerian discussion about death in a broader context with the theoretical contribution of the his opuses Being and Time and The technical question. Wagner Felix, analyzes the concept of being-to-death for the theoretical ground of the Heidegger's ontology. Following, we present a set of texts related to Winnicottian psychoanalysis. Elsa D. Oliveira examines the importance of the concept of family for the growth-process or matureness, according Winnicott's psychoanalysis. Conceição Serralha highlights the relevance of the countertransference elements and their implications in the analyst's task. Cláudia Dias, in this piece the author analyze the relationship between the father and the antisocial propensity. And Alfredo Nafah purpot to account the issue of suicide in the Winnicottian perspective. In the Review Section, Samuel Mendonça presents the reading of Rogério Miranda de Almeida's opus, Memory, Oblivion and Desire, where approaches the contributions of Freud and Nietzsche.

Keywords: Human Nature, ontology, countertransference, growth-process, psychoanalysis